CONSIDER THIS: EITHER YOU ARE EVERYMAN OR YOU KNOW SOMEONE JUST LIKE HIM. . . .

Everyman wants what every man wants, at least what most single guys approaching thirty want: a satisfying career, direction, and love. When he meets Sonja over the Internet and starts writing a screenplay based on their budding relationship, Everyman thinks his days at his dreary office are numbered at last. And once he actually gets the girl, he's sure he's been saved. But as his therapist points out, he still has some issues to deal with. He has to make a crucial decision that will alter not only the course of his romance but his life.

This is a stylistically smart, sharp novel from the heart. You can't help falling in love with Everyman. This is the guy the girls in all those chicklit novels are looking for.
