It's 1998 and Noah Carson is months away from graduating college. He is scared of the future and even though he's been offered a job at a local music magazine, the real world scares him to death. He wishes he could stay safely within the confines of his college radio station, WVVE, where he knows what he's doing. His radio show is the best part of his week, even though no one ever calls in to request a thing.

Until one night, when the request line actually rings. Sparks fly between Noah and his mystery caller, and he becomes desperate to track down the man so they can get better acquainted.

But Noah already knows the guy's identity. His mystery caller is none other than TJ Drum aka Marc Drummond, lead singer of the defunct grunge band Back Of Bourke, a band Noah adores and plays on his radio show every week.

Just as the relationship between Noah and Marc blossoms, Noah is forced to choose between his future career and loyalty to his new love. And if he's not careful, he just might lose them both...
